Sewer Hearing Delayed For North Side

and water assessments in most of the North Side annexed areas won't be held until fall, according to present thinking of the Stevens Point Common Council.

Previously, the hearing had been scheduled for Monday, May 11. Property owners in the area will have a chance to be heard that night, said Mayor Paul Borham, but the official hearing will come later, after the mains have been installed.

The Council held an information session at the County-City Building Wednesday night and discussed the special assessment procedure, which involves some technical changes from past practice.

The only areas for which a public hearing will be held May 11 are on Reserve Street N. and part of North Point Drive, where sewers have already been laid. With some generally minor exceptions, the special assessments throughout the North Side annexed areas will probably be as follows: Sanitary sewer, including roadway reconstruction, $11.25 a front foot; area assessment for interceptor sewers, one-half cent per square foot; and water, $3.20 a front foot.

William Ottensmann, consulting engineer on the project, said the sewer assessments are "cushioned" to allow for possible rock excavation. With luck, he said, the cost may be less.
